

THE IDEA

Make dialysis rides easier.

Help patients and families arrange recurring trips to treatment and home again, through a qualified transportation partner.

Two teams. Clear jobs.

Our team: Builds relationships with care teams and helps coordinate schedules, questions and follow-up.

Transport partner: Provides vehicles, staff, dispatch, the rides and billing.

How a ride would work

1. A patient, family member or care team asks for help.
2. The partner checks needs, availability and payment, then confirms the plan.
3. The partner provides the ride; our team helps with schedule changes.

Tools the business needs

- Website intake: a real ride-request and provider-referral form.
- Site Leads: a private list of requests, owners and follow-ups.
- Calendar: regular service days, trip changes and cancellations.
- Call center: a business number, caller details and address.
- Center lookup: nearby facilities and the patient's assigned center.
- Outreach: provider contacts and email marketing tools.

Status: The public website and this PDF are ready. The request form, dashboard, calendar, call center and outreach tools still need to be built and connected. Rides are not available to book.

THE NEXT STEPS

Start small. Confirm the basics.

A practical checklist for turning the idea into a small, carefully prepared pilot.

1. Confirm the transportation partner

Request the exact company details, credentials, vehicle and staffing information, insurance and billing arrangements. Confirm who does what in writing.

2. Agree on the business setup

Define duties, costs, payment and use of the brand. Have qualified healthcare counsel review the final partnership and compensation arrangement.

3. Learn from local care teams

Talk with a few dialysis centers about transportation gaps and interest in a pilot. Keep these conversations about the service, without collecting patient records.

4. Prepare the patient workflow

Set up an appropriate secure intake process, permission to share information, and a clear way to confirm eligibility, payment, scheduling and changes.

5. Run a small pilot

Once the arrangements are ready, start with a few approved patients. Track completed trips, missed pickups, patient feedback, costs and actual payments.

FIRST MOVE

Meet with the proposed partner and request the proof packet.
